Fae runs.

Fae quickly runs to the tree.

She was, I must say, very fast.

I watch as she is hit by a tree.

They go along.

Ve's a good person.

Hello! Today I met a person who goes by Example. Fae has a wonderful personality. That smile of faers really makes me happy. I could talk to faer all day although fae doesn't talk about faerself much. I wonder if faer day has been wonderful. I hope so!

1 Alice in Wonderland

Example was beginning to get very tired of sitting by vis sister on the bank, and of having nothing to do: once or twice ve had peeped into the book fae was reading, but it had no pictures or conversations in it, "and what is the use of a book," thought Example "without pictures or conversation?"

So she was considering in her own mind (as well as she could, for the hot day made her feel very sleepy and stupid), whether the pleasure of making a daisy-chain would be worth the trouble of getting up and picking the daisies, when suddenly a White Rabbit with pink eyes ran close by her.

There was nothing so VERY remarkable in that; nor did Example think it so VERY much out of the way to hear the Rabbit say to herself, "Oh dear! Oh dear! I shall be late!" (when thon thought it over afterwards, it occurred to thon that thon ought to have wondered at this, but at the time it all seemed quite natural); but when the Rabbit actually TOOK A WATCH OUT OF her WAISTCOAT-POCKET, and looked at it, and then hurried on, Example started to thons feet, for it flashed across thons mind that thon had never before seen a rabbit with either a waistcoat-pocket, or a watch to take out of it, and burning with curiosity, thon ran across the field after her, and fortunately was just in time to see her pop down a large rabbit-hole under the hedge.

In another moment down went Example after hir, never once considering how in the world she was to get out again.

The rabbit-hole went straight on like a tunnel for some way, and then dipped suddenly down, so suddenly that Example had not a moment to think about stopping herself before ze found herself falling down a very deep well.

Either the well was very deep, or ey fell very slowly, for ey had plenty of time as ey went down to look about em and to wonder what was going to happen next. First, ey tried to look down and make out what ey was coming to, but it was too dark to see anything; then ey looked at the sides of the well, and noticed that they were filled with cupboards and book-shelves; here and there ey saw maps and pictures hung upon pegs. ey took down a jar from one of the shelves as ey passed; it was labelled "ORANGE MARMALADE", but to eir great disappointment it was empty: ey did not like to drop the jar for fear of killing somebody, so managed to put it into one of the cupboards as ey fell past it.

“Well!” thought Example to themself, “after such a fall as this, I shall think nothing of tumbling down stairs! How brave they’ll all think me at home! Why, I wouldn’t say anything about it, even if I fell off the top of the house!” (Which was very likely true.)

“But I’m NOT a serpent, I tell you!” said Example . “I’m a-I’m a-”

“Well! WHAT are you?” said the Pigeon. “I can see you’re trying to invent something!”

“I-I’m a person,” said Example, rather doubtfully, as xe remembered the number of changes xe had gone through that day.

“A likely story indeed!” said the Pigeon in a tone of the deepest contempt. “I’ve seen a good many persons in my time, but never ONE with such a neck as that! No, no! You’re a serpent; and there’s no use denying it. I suppose you’ll be telling me next that you never tasted an egg!”

“I HAVE tasted eggs, certainly,” said Example, who was a very truthful child; “but persons eat eggs quite as much as serpents do, you know.”

“I don’t believe it,” said the Pigeon; “but if they do, why then they’re a kind of serpent, that’s all I can say.”

This was such a new idea to Example, that ve was quite silent for a minute or two, which gave the Pigeon the opportunity of adding, “You’re looking for eggs, I know THAT well enough; and what does it matter to me whether you’re a person or a serpent?”

“It matters a good deal to ME,” said Example hastily; ’but I’m not looking for eggs, as it happens; and if I was, I shouldn’t want YOURS: I don’t like them raw.’

“Well, be off, then!” said the Pigeon in a sulky tone, as ey settled down again into its nest. Example crouched down among the trees as well as thon could, for thons neck kept getting entangled among the branches, and every now and then thon had to stop and untwist it. After a while thon remembered that thon still held the pieces of mushroom in thons hands, and thon set to work very carefully, nibbling first at one and then at the other, and growing sometimes taller and sometimes shorter, until thon had succeeded in bringing thonself down to thons usual height.

“Oh, I’ve had such a curious dream!” said Example, and per told per sister, as well as per could remember them, all these strange Adventures of pers that you have just been reading about; and when per had finished, per sister kissed per, and said, “It WAS a curious dream, dear, certainly: but now run in to your tea; it’s getting late.” So Example got up and ran off, thinking while per ran, as well per might, what a wonderful dream it had been.
